New York City has finally bitten the bullet and banned the excessive use of plastic shopping bags. The policy, passed by the New York City Council, was heralded as a huge victory for environmentalists. How big of a victory? It's hard to tell. Because while plastic bags are a problem for the planet, they're not a major contributor to global warming, except for possibly as a whole. All that plastic leaks out into the sea, the oceans, and the air. But as it turns out, there's a better way to tackle the plastic menace: As you peel that one trash bag from your sack of groceries, feel free to consider this: That perfect cake you bought? It can't fit in a plastic bag. The beautiful dress? The bag won't be big enough. Even if you use a paper bag for your groceries, reusable bags, you're still using more plastic than necessary. So what you do when you get home is the real victory.

Risk assessment for reactivation of hepatitis B virus in hemodialysis patients. The risk for reactivation of hepatitis B virus (HBV) in hemodialysis (HD) patients is not well defined. The purpose of this study was to assess the risk for HBV reactivation and its association with the maintenance of a satisfactory dialysis dose. A prospective, single-center cohort study involving 76 HD patients (47 men and 29 women) receiving HD treatment was performed. Serum HBV DNA levels were measured before HD and after HD once every 3 months for 6 years. HD was performed 3 times a week for 4-6 h. After HD, the predialysis serum concentrations of HBV DNA were decreased by a median of 0.11 log₁₀ copies/mL. The decline rate of serum HBV DNA was significantly slower in patients with hepatitis B e antigen (

Time to fit a new restraint system -? Is there a difference between damage due to solid material versus live items? I've got a scaffold which appears to be toast, but a couple of weeks ago I had to replace a guy because he fell out of the scaffold onto a car. Although the car was undamaged, we can't prove whether the accident caused the scaffold to be damaged or the other way around. I've read that a scaffold can be damaged by a falling material, whereas a falling live item makes a mess. Has anyone else experienced this? 2 Replies When you install a scaffold, don't forget that it is fixed at the top and the bottom. If the bottom drops or gets lifted, then you have a problem. If the top drops, then you have less of a problem, but some scaffolding is "sister" to the work area. You know, "The capo may not be on top of the keyboard, but that doesn't mean you can't play the guitar." Tim - this is the thing I was thinking but hadn't seen any posts re that. Most of the scaffolding I see are robust, solidly built. Do you think that they are designed to survive a fall? I'd imagine that the metal clips and beams that hold them up are what can break off. That's not a problem in my situation, since the scaffold is not near the work area, but could still be a problem with a hard but narrow item hitting the scaffold. I guess the question is: what makes a hard item dangerous? I have seen them damaged by live loads like when people can walk around on the scaffold, or when people jump off of them, they can fall and catch the scaffold on the way down. But I have not seen this with falling loads like falling sheet rock. I guess it all depends on what kind of material it is. There are a number of things that some of you may not know about my son (I will include hyperlinks). He is bipolar (as well as ADHD) and he has been in and out of groups and hospitals since he was 3. This creates a challenge for him, as I have to deal with a list of medications that affect the other guy, as well as be mindful about his effects on them. He has had 3 stays in juvenile hall, and even though he doesn't remember the stays, he gets extremely upset if I
